Interview.

RESOURCES ARE SECONDARY

Says Real Issue Is of Deeper and Far More Vital Import to Country.

WILL FIGHT TO BITTER END

Former Forester May Receive
Important Chair at Yale University.

(By Associated Press.)

WASHINGTON, January 14.—The conservation of the natural resources of the country and the conservation of the people's control over the government of the country are both at stake, says Gifford Pinchot in a startling charge made in an interview with the Associated Press. Pinchot declared that the real issue now facing the country is not the loss of the natural resources, but the loss of the people's control over the government of the country. He said that the people's control over the government of the country is at stake, and that the people must fight to the bitter end to preserve it.

Pinchot declared absolutely to make any comment on the action of President Taft in removing him from office. He did sound a note of warning, however, which shows that he considers the situation very tense. He declared that the great moral issue now facing the country is not the loss of the natural resources, but the loss of the people's control over the government of the country. He said that the people's control over the government of the country is at stake, and that the people must fight to the bitter end to preserve it.

The former forester declared that he will not give up the battle just because the first round has gone against him. He says that he will stay by his gun and fight the matter out. Pinchot will be given an equal opportunity with Ballinger to present his side of the case when the hearing on the so-called Ballinger-Pinchot controversy comes off.

Mail advices received yesterday from Washington indicate that there will be a long and serious examination of the Pinchot case. The examination is expected to be a long and serious one. The examination is expected to be a long and serious one.
